It's true that student behavior in schools have several problems in recent years, which has variety of reasons. I believe that there are some steps can be taken to tackle it/the problem.

There are several reasons that could lead to bad student behaviors. In my opinion, three main factors are to blame for the way young people behave at school nowadays. Firstly, the parents are tend to be too lenient to their children, so that Its difficult for .. to accept the children don't accept the teachers' instructions or school rules. Secondly, If teachers cant control their students, there must be an issue with the quality of classroom management training or .. teacher has bad management with the classroom, then lost control of students. Finally, children are influenced by the behaviour of celebrities the celebrities make a bad example for students. Students are easily influenced by them.

~~There are some solutions to help with the issue.~~ what's the issue? Students behaviour can certainly be improved Firstly, parents better setup rules for children, for example, when students make mistakes, they need to be punished to get the importance of rules. Furthermore, schools should train teachers with discipline techniques to manage classroom. On the other hand, the teachers should keep touch with parents to get better conversation with issues of students. Finally, the famous people should be care of their actions to give fans a correct direction.

In conclusion, there are many problems with student behavior, however, in my opinion, some methods can be used to solve it.

In many countries schools have severe problems with student behaviour. What do you think are the causes of this? What solutions can you suggest?

It is true that the behaviour of school pupils in some parts of the world has been getting worse in recent years. There are a variety of possible reasons for this, but steps can definitely be taken to tackle the problem.

In my opinion, three main factors are to blame for the way young people behave at school nowadays. Firstly, modern parents tend to be too lenient or permissive. Many children become accustomed to getting whatever they want, and they find it difficult to accept the demands of teachers or the limits imposed on them by school rules. Secondly, if teachers cannot control their students, there must be an issue with the quality of classroom management training or support within schools. Finally, children are influenced by the behaviour of celebrities, many of whom set the example that success can be achieved without finishing school.

Student behaviour can certainly be improved. I believe that the change must start with parents, who need to be persuaded that it is important to set firm rules for their children. When children misbehave or break the rules, parents should use reasonable punishments to demonstrate that actions have consequences. Also, schools could play an important role in training both teachers and parents to use effective disciplinary techniques, and in improving the communication between both groups. At the same time, famous people, such as musicians and football players, need to understand the responsibility that they have to act as role models to children.

In conclusion, schools will continue to face discipline problems unless parents, teachers and public figures set clear rules and demonstrate the right behaviour themselves.

In conclusion, one opinion, but in my opinion another one... ## example It is sometimes argued that whether government spent money on space programmes or public service. Governments in some countries spend large amounts of money on space exploration programmesI completely agree the idea that invest on public servicethe funds should be allocated to public service.

~~The space programmes is not worthing ~~ There are several reasons why space programmes should be abandonedFirstly, the failure of space programmes will waste lots of money. It needs scientists, facilities, equipments, they are really expensive. Secondly, the space programme has no beneficial for normal people. They are just made for the political men to show off their power. Finally, The risk of programme is very high, it will causes some accidents, such as death. So the safety of it will be a big challenge for us.

~~Governments should invest more on the public service.~~ I believe the money from space programmes should go to vital public services insteadThe cost of public service is much cheaper than space programmes. Furthermore, ~~it~~ public service will be beneficial for so many people in society, such as doctor, teacher, police instead of astronauts. Finally, Public service impacts everyone, it could help reduce poverty, improve the quality of life. We all use the public service, such as, roads, park, hospitals, schools.

In conclusion, it seems to me that ~~it's more beneficial to invest on public service not space programmes. ~~ my view is that governments should spend money on services that benefit all members of society

The money spent by governments on space programmes would be better spent on vital public services such as schools and hospitals. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Governments in some countries spend large amounts of money on space exploration programmes. I completely agree with the idea that these are a waste of money, and that the funds should be allocated to public services. There are several reasons why space programmes should be abandoned. Firstly, it is extremely expensive to train scientists and other staff involved with space missions, and facilities and equipment also come at a huge cost to the government. Secondly, these programmes do not benefit normal people in our daily lives; they are simply vanity projects for politicians. Finally, many missions to space fail completely, and the smallest technological error can cost astronauts their lives. The Challenger space shuttle disaster showed us that space travel is extremely dangerous, and in my opinion it is not worth the risk. I believe that the money from space programmes should go to vital public services instead. It is much cheaper to train doctors, teachers, police and other public service workers than it is to train astronauts or the scientists and engineers who work on space exploration projects. Furthermore, public servants do jobs that have a positive impact on every member of society. For example, we all use schools, hospitals and roads, and we all need the security that the police provide. If governments reallocated the money spent on space travel and research, many thousands of people could be lifted out of poverty or given a better quality of life. In conclusion, my view is that governments should spend money on services that benefit all members of society, and it is wrong to waste resources on projects that do not improve our everyday lives.

People have different views about whether children should be encouraged to be competitive or be co-operate with others. In my opinion, they are both beneficial, but I believe ~~co-operating~~co-operate is more important than ~~com-~~ ~~petitive~~competition.

On the one hand, Competition could be a motivation for children to work harder on the study, while makes them be more confident in tests then they will get better score, The outcome will make themselves become more confident. And the independent work will prove themselves' abilities. The progress will be faster. when these students left school, Also, the competitive situation will be helpful in competitive situations such as for the job interviews ~~to~~ in order to prepare for the adult life.

On the other hand, it is perhaps even more important to prepare children for the adult life that require co-operation ~~the co-operation plays a more important role in life.~~ For example, it's very common to follow boss's instructions, help junior staff with teams in working. And collaboration is more useful than winning, it could achieve the bigger achievement. Young people will learn a lot if they could collaborate with other senior teammates. Working together is more beneficial than work alone. Instead of compete with others to become winners, teachers should show the beneficial of co-operating.

In conclusion, I can understand why ppl might want to ...but it seems to me that co-operation is much more beneficial than competition in long term.

In conclusion, while .., I believe that...

Some people think that a sense of competition in children should be encouraged. Others believe that children who are taught to co-operate rather than compete become more useful adults. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

People have different views about whether children should be taught to be competitive or co-operative. While a spirit of competition can sometimes be useful in life, I believe that the ability to co-operate is more important. On the one hand, competition can be a great source of motivation for children. When teachers use games or prizes to introduce an element of competitiveness into lessons, it can encourage children to work harder to outdo the other pupils in the class. This kind of healthy rivalry may help to build children's self confidence, while pushing them to work independently and progress more quickly. When these children leave school, their confidence and determination will help them in competitive situations such as job interviews. It can therefore be argued that competition should be encouraged in order to prepare children for adult life. On the other hand, it is perhaps even more important to prepare children for the many aspects of adult life that require co-operation. In the workplace, adults are expected to work in teams, follow instructions given by their superiors, or supervise and support the more junior members of staff. Team collaboration skills are much more useful than a competitive determination to win. This is the attitude that I believe schools should foster in young people. Instead of promoting the idea that people are either winners or losers, teachers could show children that they gain more from working together. In conclusion, I can understand why people might want to encourage competitiveness in children, but it seems to me that a co-operative attitude is much more desirable in adult life.
